SOMEBODY'S STENOG-Watch Your Step, Cam!

WELL HERE WE ARE ENJOYING YER AINT THE WOODS-CAMPED HERE CONCEITED ARE YER! MILES AWAY FROM TROUBLE HAVING HIS OWN TROUBLES! WONDER IF HE MISSES ME

CAN JUST SEE POOR POOR MISS L SCRATCH"THE MISS SCRATCH NOW DICKENS! I DON'T TRYIN' TO PLEASE THE OLD CRAB! SHE BIT LIKE THAT OFF SOMETHING WHEN DAME ! SHE ASKED TO BAT FOR ME WHILE I WAS AWAY' GUESS SHE CAN HOLD OUT BUT I'LL HAVE A MESS TO CLEAN UP.

By Hayward Registered U. S. Patent Onne MISTER SMITHERS, THE FILES WERE SO MIXED UP IT WAS SLOW FINDING THAT SMITH LETTER AND - I DON'T WANT TO KNOCK BUT THE MACHINE HASN'T BEEN CLEANED FOR MONTHS, AND WE'LL NEED SOME STAMPS. STAMPS ? WHY I GAVE MISS OFLAGE A THOUSAND JUST BEFORE SHE WENT.
WE COULDN'T HAVE USED
ALL OF EM.

TOOTS AND CASPER-Casper Finds Out How to Wake Up Aunt Susie.

ARE COMING

BET AUNT

THIS DISH-PAN

By J. E. MURPHY

THE OUTTA LUCK CLUB-Cousin Claude Decides to Stay a Little Longer. THAT'S MY WIFE'S BOOB LET THE LAD PLAY A FEW HANDS COUSIN THAT'S VISITING US OF POKER WITH US. I CAN'T GET RID OF HIM AND HE SAYS HE WON'T GO HOME SURE THEN HE'LL GO HOME TOMORROW

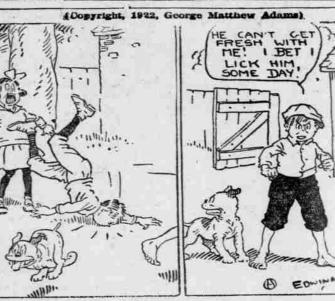

"CAP" STUBBS-Cap Won't Stand for Any Monkey Bizness!!

Getting there first on a fourteen-car Pullman train with only one diner,

By DONAHEY

SCHOOL DAYS By DWIG

Be EDWINA

When A Girl Marries

By ANNE LISLE.

Copyright, 1920, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

"Let me call your number for you," requested Miss May with her modest insistence on the fact that, though I call her partner, she came originally into my office as secretary and as-

"Not me!" laughed Mr. Lacy ungrammatically and heartily. "My only living relative is going to be spoiled like a baby and waited on like a queen. So she will kindly sit still and yet Ralph do it."

With gay camaradierie we turned to make ready for our excursion out to dine, while Mr. Lacy sat down at the telephone. There was a murmur of conversation to which I paid mur of conversation to which I paid no attention, and then I heard Mr. Lacy calling gailly:

"I got Park and he likes it fine. He'll meet us at my favorite eatery—say, by jingo! I ought to have asked you folks whereyou wanted to go instead of railroading things through like the social club dub I am. I'm sorry. But I was so blooming keen for giving Park a chance to get in with worth-while folks that I didn't think a step beyond that. Forgive me?"

Even as I was explaining and insisting that there was nothing to for-give the telephone rang and Mr. Lacy picked up the receiver he had just put down.

"For you—Mrs. Harrison," he an-nounced after a moment. I slid into the place he had vacated for me and said idly: "Mrs. Harrison speaking.

"Hello, Anne! It's Tom Mason," came the response of the last voice I'd dreamed of hearing. "Twe got to consult you—and at once. Be right down. So long till I see you."

And the receiver slammed up on the hook with a peremptory click.

Even if I had wanted to refuse
Tom, I had no way of reaching him.
I hadn't the slightest idea where his

CHAPTER 657.

As I turned from my brief and one-sided telephone conversation with Tom Mason, I realized that it wasn't going to be a pleasant task to inform Miss May and Mr. Lacy that I could not dine with them. But I took the plunge at once.

"That was Mr. Mason, one of my husband's oldest friends," I explained. "He's been out of town performing a very great service for us. I didn't know he had returned till I heard his voice just now. He coolly announced that he must see at once announced that he must see at once and would be right down. Then he rang off. So I guess we may safely assume that that's that."

"Oh, I say, can't we all dine together?" asked Mr. Lacy.
"Mr. Mason was very urgent." I explained at a loss to make the matter sound as imperative as I felt it to be.

"Of course," said Mr. Lacy quietly fter an instant. "We'll run right after an instant. along and meet Park. And Mrs. Har-rison—don't think me intrusive or impudent for adding this. But if circumstances compel you to have your dinner with this old friend of your—family, don't imagine I'll be fool enough to take offence or feel miffed or anything like that. I hope I'm not talking like a fresh-country bumpkin."

'You're talking like a dear," announced Miss May with astonishing assurance. "Mrs. Harrison understands perfectly that you're releas-ing her without the slightest thought of misunderstanding. And I don't see why we should risk her not having dinner at all for fear of hurting our feelings. So it's just as well to have verything settled before we go."

"Nice people!" I cried, "I might have been silly enough to starve to death if you hadn't given me permission to have a sandwich, and glass of milk with Tom Mason."

My bantering tone sent them off satisfied. But I couldn't help feeling worried. Tom's tone had carried some hint of agitation. Nervously going over the possibilities of the sit-uation, I paced up and down the office waiting for him. Finally he burst into the office looking so agitated that I could scarcely believe this was the suave and imperturba-ble Tom Mason. Without a preliminary word of greeting he demanded: "Where's Daisy? Have you any idea?"

"Daisy?" I repeated stupidly, "Daisy?" I repeated stupidly.
"What's the matter with her?"
"I don't know," replied Tom grimly. "That's what I'm asking you—where's Daisy? Don't stand staring at me as if you think me crazy. Tell me what you know about the—poor me what you know about the poor kid." "Why, Tom." I answered slowly, "you're sweeping me from my bearings. You sound so—mysterious I thought you'd know where she was.

They thought so at the office—"
"So you did miss her!" cried Tom in a tone I couldn't fathom. "She didn't slip dut—unnoticed. The poor little thing isn't friendless."

"Of course not," I said. "You couldn't think that. I tried to locate her almost a week ago and they seem-ed to think down at your office that you'd sent her instructions to go off on a buying trip. Evidently you didn't. That leaves us ready to start off from the beginning if we're going to figure"—

"When did you see her last?" interrupted Tom.
"About two weeks ago, I suppose.

"About two weeks ago, I suppose. I'm not so sure of that, as I am of the first time I missed her," I answared, interesting myself to ask. "But why are we standing here staring at each other like two wild people? There's nothing the matter. Why should we act as if there were?" "Let's not bluff ourselves or each other," replied Tom curtly. "This is usely." The studio is locked and siother," replied Tom curtly. "This is ugly. The studio is locked and silent. They don't know a thing about her at her boarding house. Mrs. Hill is in the dark. The poor kiddie hasn't any friends. At least none that I know of. There isn't any place to turn or anything to do but inform the police."

"Oh, Tom, I wouldn't do that!" I cried. "Betty Brice was out of reach once for a while, and it wasn't any-

Even as it slipped out I was con-scious that I had given Betty the name that was hers before her mar-riage to poor Terry.

(To Be Continued)

USE TIMES WANT ADS. FOR BEST AND OUICKEST RESULTS